

What to Expect From the Results:

This sounds simple, right? Does this thing really work? Recently, a hospital study was conducted that showed a 92.5% correlation between the results of the Zyto's recommendations and that of the doctors' based on their lab results. Just understand that the Zyto is not trying to diagnose any problem or condition – it's simply looking for where you are out of balance at a particular point in time. Everything in the body happens first at the smallest, energetic level before it shows up at the symptomatic, physical level. This smaller, energetic level is where the Zyto works. For this reason, some tests results will not correlate perfectly with a person's symptoms at first. The human body is a complicated organism and we often have to work through different layers, like peeling off the layers of an onion. But we have found, by following the recommendations provided by the Zyto to work through these layers you will be able to address the "unseen" non-symptomatic imbalances until you will eventually get to the symptomatic layers of concern.

What is the most exciting is with the Zyto we finally have a means of evaluating a person's response to the chemical stresses of life where in the past we relied on symptoms or trial and error. This is a huge component of health and you cannot be truly healthy and experience wellness without addressing body chemistry. Your adjustments, your exercise, your emotional and hormonal responses will not be as effective if you are chemically out of balance or lacking the nutritional building blocks required by the body.

A renowned expert and author on wellness by the name of Dr. James Chestnut teaches that disease results from just two different causes:

- 1. Toxicity – the accumulation of chemicals in your system that don't belong
- 2. Deficiency – lacking the necessary nutrients and building blocks that do belong

The Zyto helps us address both of these!

What's a Zyto and Would I Want it?

We understand that increasing levels of lifestyle stresses over time accumulate and cause our physiology to become imbalanced. This is what ultimately leads to a loss of health. These lifestyle stresses can be broken into physical, chemical and emotional sources. So our vision in this office is to provide treatment and strategies to reduce the devastating effects of these three different stressors.

For this reason, we are excited to announce a new technology to assist us in this vision. The technology is called the Zyto and it allows us to measure a person's response to the chemical stresses. In other words, we can determine any ill effects of what a person eats, drinks, or breathes. Likewise, we can determine if a person is lacking any vital nutrients or building blocks that the body requires to stay in balance and maintain health.

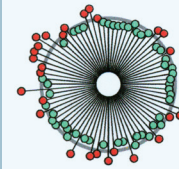

How Does The Zyto Work?

You simply place your hand on the Zyto and the galvanic conduction pads do the work. Over a five minute period, the cradle sends hundreds of digital or energetic stimuli into the skin of the hand. These stimuli are designed to initiate and read the response from your body. In other words, the Zyto will ask your body questions in the form of a digital stressor and then track the response your body sends back from different "biomarkers." The technology measures this response to see if it is a normal, healthy response or if the signal stimulates an abnormal or stress response in your body. It then records this information and gives us a report of where your body is in balance and where it is stressed or out of balance. It even tells us what organ systems are at the greatest stress. This readout is referred to as your "baseline."

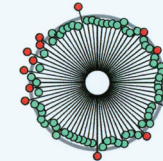

Now for the important part :

After baseline has been established, the Zyto will begin to test different nutritional supplements and herbal products to see what products tend to reduce the stress response in your body and restore balance to any systems. This is done in the same manner that baseline was established. These results will be listed in priority from which supplements restore the most balance, down to the least until complete chemical balance would be restored in your body – what is referred to as homeostasis.
